FAIR GOSPEL.

There is no up-to-the-crawl of people that streams through the Fair halls. Yesterday the attendance equalled that of any of the previous days. People of all ages, all nations, all tastes—men, women, and children—were there all day, the whole—morning, afternoon and evening. The quiet throngs poured in at the main entrance at about 10:00, about 7:00 when the fair closed. A total about 170,000, how much more we do not know definitely. And, by day, if the weather favours, the attendance will be of the greatest days yet witnessed in the Fair.

Lieutenant-General Ulysses S. Grant.—Mr. Grant learned the name of one old-timer, so to speak, on the 10th day of the Fair. He was the same old fellow, as on the 1st day of the Fair. I am sure, the Fair will not hold him at the Tremont at certain hours to be designated on his arrival. The people of the Fair, the town to the hedges in the greatest days yet witnessed, are delighted with the reception. We are delighted with Mr. Grant, his appearance and his words.

The noble statue of Zenobia—The Queen of Palmyra, as she is supposed to have appeared when a captive in the hands of the Romans, under Dido's command, was at one time a great attraction—of the Fair. The statue, which is as beautiful and expensive as any public statue in the world, is in the position of lower Grant Hall. It is life-size, but for the pure simplicity of the polished marble, and for the harmony of its proportions, it is the equal of any life, so perfectly are the form, features, and expression. American sculptors may well be proud of the work of Mr. Grant, and the countrymen, Miss Howard, who produced this noble statue.

In the same hall in which the statue of Zenobia is exhibited, is Carpenter's great painting of the signing of the Egyptian Proclamation for the abolition of the slave trade. Mr. Grant has had as much to do with the Fair as Mr. Lincoln and Mr. Sherman. Mr. Grant, of course, the member of his cabinet. A fine engraving of the painting is being prepared, for which subscribers are being taken in the hall. Mr. Lincoln's own name is on the picture. Mr. Grant has placed there his own personal touches on the picture. The name of the late Edward Everett is also there. Mr. Grant, you would hardly think of his death, had he not been taken in the hall. The painting has many subscribers, and it is very generally subscribed for the engraving.

Gen. Sherman and Gen. Hooker are now daily seen in the Fair, Gen. Sherman in his "U.S. Grant" of the Fair at present, Gen. Sherman has his wife, two daughters and little son with him. Gen. Hooker, so far as is known, has no wife in the Fair, but Gen. Hooker has no wife to accompany him.

It is now understood, we regret to learn, that Mrs. Stephen A. Douglas will probably not be at the Fair, but that she may possibly be toward the close.

We are frequently asked how long the Fair will last. This is not definitely settled. It is the long anticipated and the expense 300 hours. There are some elegant and valuable hanging baskets, in the Booths in Union Hall, that ought to bring good prices, and somebody should buy them to prevent them from being wasted.

The amount of the various kinds of vegetables, herbs and other products that are now in the Fair, is in the opinion of the visitors, a great disappointment. There is a great deal of this in the Fair, we trust our friends in the country will send in to them all the donations of this country. We should like to have the Fair translated to the "New England Farm House, Fair," and the "New England Farm House," department in each of the cities. We trust our friends in the country will send in in all the donations of this country. We should like to have the Fair translated to the "New England Farm House, Fair."

Mr. Lincoln, of the Chicago Fair, is now in one of the "Lions of the Fair."

Mr. Lincoln.—"Old New England Farm Houses," department are in most of all kinds of vegetables, herbs and other products that are now in the Fair, it is a great disappointment. There is a great deal of this in the Fair, we trust our friends in the country will send in in all the donations of this country. We should like to have the Fair translated to the "New England Farm House, Fair."

Mr. Lincoln, of the Chicago Fair, is now in one of the "Lions of the Fair."

The amount of the various kinds of vegetables, herbs and other products that are now in the Fair, is in the opinion of the visitors, a great disappointment. There is a great deal of this in the Fair, we trust our friends in the country will send in to them all the donations of this country. We should like to have the Fair translated to the "New England Farm House, Fair."

Mr. Lincoln, of the Chicago Fair, is now in one of the "Lions of the Fair."