MOWRY'S CASE-HARDENED

AXLES.

MOWRY'S TEMPERED SPRINGS.

Reasons why "MOWRY'S CASE-HARDENED AXLES" are as reliable as can be made.

1st. They are made from charcoal, cold-blast, hammered, "Salisbury Iron"—the best iron made in the world suitable for Axles; so say all practical railroad men.

2d. I take extra pains in finishing the arms or spindles, finishing them as highly as a piece of cutlery, and making them to fit the boxes perfectly, which insures a perfect bearing.

3d. I case-harden, or steel-convert the arms or spindles, which process makes them much firmer and stiffer, causing less friction, less liability of heating and sticking of the arms to the box, less consumption of oil, and enabling a team to carry about twenty-five per cent. more to a load than can be carried with any common make of Axles.

4th. A smaller Axle of my make can be used with more safety to perform the same amount of business, and do it with more ease, than any common make in use.

5th. All livery men that have used them give them a decided preference. As their carriages are put to the most severe tests, and are more abused than any other class of work, they feel the importance of getting the best.

6th. I have obtained in every Fair where I have sent them

(where there has been any competition) the highest premium awarded. I obtained premiums at the following places: At the United States Fair, held at Chicago; at the Illinois State Fair, held at Rockford; and at the Ohio State Fair, held at Zanesville.

7th. It is a fact, that most of the Axles furnished to carriage makers are made from a poor quality of promiscuous scrap, or the cheapest quality of rolled English iron, or an equivalent; hence the numerous breakages, causing yearly a great destruction of life and property, and the maiming of hundreds of persons for life. The majority of persons are ignorant on the subject of iron, supposing all iron to be alike.

Such is not the fact, there being certainly as many varieties of iron as of wood, each having its peculiar qualities and adaptations; such being the case, it is manifest "the Axles are the most essential parts of the carriage."
