The CHANCE AT GETTYSBURG.

BY MICKEY, OF COMPANY Z.

The second day passed quietly enough. Skirmishing was going on in the afternoon, but cannonading broke out in the evening. There was no change in the front of battle, and all the lines were still where they were at the beginning of the day. The sick and wounded were taken care of, and the regiment was in pretty good order.

It was a live heart that ceased to beat.

When Maj. Gen. John B. Steedman, of Tullahoma, died, the soldiers of the 10th New York, and all his friends and countrymen, mourned his passing. He had been a brave and valiant soldier, and his death was deeply felt by those who knew him. The soldiers of the 10th New York, who had marched with him in battle, were overcome with grief at his loss. They had fought side by side with him, and now they were to mourn his absence.

The body of Maj. Gen. John B. Steedman was removed to his home in Tullahoma, where he would be laid to rest in peace. The soldiers of the 10th New York were present at the funeral, and they stood by his grave, as a mark of respect and honor. The soldiers of the 10th New York, and all his friends and countrymen, mourned his passing.

"Do not believe that Judge Drummond will resign," said one of the aislewomen of the Milwaukee bar. He continued: "Judge Drummond is not going to resign. He is going to retire, and he is going to retire this year. He will retire at the end of the term. He has served his time, and he is through."

But the real story is that Drummond is not going to resign, and that he is going to retire. He has been a judge for twenty years, and he has served longer than any other judge in the state.
